Omaha was drowning in awards and accolades in 2015 for their foodie culture, local sourcing, extensive wine and beer craft, sustainability, and vegan friendliness. Being on-trend can often create a revolving-door effect in the restaurant industry, as fads change and doors close. We looked at some of the newest promising eateries in 2015, and how they are keeping Omaha at the pinnacle of food culture.

UnCommon Ramen- And A Shipload of New Arrivals

Yoshi-Ya is bringing their interpretation of the dish to Flagship Commons at Westroads. Several other restaurants have taken up residence in the daring new food scape, which opened at the end of 2015.

Yum Roll, the newest sibling to Blue Sushi and Sake, features sushi, nigiri, sashimi, and an assortment of Japanese beer, sake, and tea.

Juan Taco brings the food truck vibe inside with their minimalistic Mexi menu.

Weirdough Pizza lives up to its name with oddly mouthwatering offerings such as Pistachio Pizza with ricotta salata, pistachio, and arugula, and The Northerner with béchamel, prosciutto, roasted potato, green onion, and cheese curds.

Clever Greens is heart healthy in more ways than one, and they make eating your veggies fun and delicious. Cheeky dishes like Rock the Goat, which features goat cheese, walnuts, charred red onion, strawberry, spinach, and arugula, will make you smile before your dish has even arrived.

Familiar faces at The Commons include Omaha fixtures Amsterdam Falafel and Kabob, Blatt Beer and Table (which will offer patio seating in the spring), and Aromas Coffeeshouse. A ping pong table, foosball, and full service bar prove that hanging out at the mall is no longer just for hordes of teenagers.
